

Sound Decisions

A fifteenth century theologian, Kempis, said, “Who is so wise as to have perfect knowledge of all things? Therefore, trust not too much to your own opinion, but be ready also to hear opinions of others. Though your opinion is good, yet if for the love of God you choose and follow another, you shall profit handsomely.” Kempis recognized the importance of seeking the opinions of trusted advisors when making plans for life.

Solomon, the wisest man in Israel, wrote about the importance of getting counsel from others. In order to determine God’s course for life, the wise person should open up several counselors’ through which God will bring His guiding wisdom.

When a person seeks the wise counsel of others, he/she show their realization that they might be over looking some important factors in their decision making. God desires to protect us through wise advisors. Let them help you discover a clearer picture of His plan for your life. If you seek wise counsel, you multiply your chances for sound decisions.
